

Question: Who should get H1N1 vaccine?

Answer: The CDC is recommending that people who need to be vaccinated first before the rest of the population. They are: Pregnant women, people who take care of babies, the young (from 6 months to 24 years old), health care and emergency medical service workers, and people 24 years old and older who have chronic health problems. Call your doctor if you are one of these groups.