In The News

Pregnancy diet affects child's long-term health, study shows

Women who don't watch what they eat during pregnancy can affect their child's health well into their teenage years. Nutrition during pregnancy plays a pivotal role in determining the child's body mass index (BMI) even during adolescence, according to a new study.

Study Finds (1/2022)

Merck's COVID-19 pill not approved for use in pregnancy

Newly infected COVID-19 patients have two new treatment options that can be taken at home. But that convenience comes with a catch: The pills have to be taken as soon as possible once symptoms appear. The challenge is getting tested, getting a prescription and starting the pills in a short window.

AP News (12/2021)

Anytime Is the Right Time for COVID Vaccine in Pregnancy

The best time during pregnancy to get a COVID-19 vaccine appears to be right now. A new study found that antibodies to the SARS-CoV-2 virus in nearly 1,400 women and their babies at the time of delivery didn't vary dramatically based on when a woman got her vaccine during pregnancy.

3 in 5 pregnant Americans remain unvaccinated, CDC says

For many people, the thin red line on a pregnancy test ushers in countless changes. You change what you eat and drink, how you exercise and socialize and sleep, and keep careful track of what medications you should and shouldn't take. But for many Americans, there's one choice they largely haven't made: getting vaccinated.
