In The News

Public interest in mammograms decreased during COVID pandemic

While many medical societies recommend annual mammography screenings for women ages 40 and older, public interest in mammograms and breast cancer varies by geography and has been affected by COVID-19, according to two recent studies.

Groups Release Updated Guidance for Breast Screening

The American College of Radiology and Society of Breast Imaging recommend that women begin receiving annual mammograms at age 40, with added vigilance for those in historically overlooked populations. Both shared updated guidance in the Journal of the American College of Radiology on June 18. Their recommendations are based on an "extensive" data from randomized controlled trials and peer-reviewed literature.
