In The News

Nursing Educators adapt curricula amid COVID-19

Nursing educators have had to reexamine teaching strategies, curricula and clinical training for nurses during the COVID-19 pandemic, with nurse leaders stepping up to make sure educational milestones are achieved while nurses maintain the health and safety of their patients.

Nurses may make career shifts to cope with recession

Increasing employment options in a recession may require nurses to further their education, or look outside of hospitals to other job settings such as public health, nursing homes, home care or travel nursing. Nurses might also consider entering a different specialty area of practice or a change of location if the local nursing market is saturated.

BOSS Magazine (08/2020)

Don't overlook Nurses for Research, Innovation

Nurses bring value to health care but are often overlooked in areas of innovation and technology, according to Texas nurse and entrepreneur Rebecca Love. Nurses should be encouraged and supported -- just as other clinicians are -- to do research and think about innovative solutions, Love said.
