According to Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, and estimated 5.8 billion adults and children are religiously affiliated around the globe, representing 84% of the 2010 world population of 6.9 billion. The largest religions are: 2.2 billion Christians (32%), 1.6 billion Muslims (23%), 1 billion Hindus (15%), nearly 500 million Buddhists (7%) and 14 million Jews (0.2%) around the world as of 2010. In addition, more than 400 million people (6%) practice various folk or traditional religions, including African traditional religions, Chinese folk religions, Native American religions and Australian aboriginal religions. An estimated 58 million people – slightly less than 1% of the global population – belong to other religions, including the Baha'i faith, Jainism, Sikhism, Shintoism, Taoism, Tenrikyo, Wicca and Zoroastrianism, to mention just a few.

The faith-based community may perhaps be the single greatest representative cross-section of a community and comprises roughly 350,000 congregations in the United States. Congregations currently play a critical role once disasters strike, providing food, counseling, shelter, transportation and communications to their congregants and their surrounding communities. However, this role and their activities are neither systematized, nor included in the disaster mitigation planning process.

Congregations are expected to respond but largely operate outside of the formal structures that manage disasters. Even when they are engaged, those efforts tend to be opportunistic and informal; they do not address congregations as an existing system with unique resources and capital that can be harnessed before, during and after disasters. This project is an opportunity to increase the effectiveness with which congregations prepare for and respond to disasters.

The IAEM faith-based caucus is working to develop a knowledge base for the roles, assets and potential engagement of congregations in coordinated disaster preparedness and response and serve as a bridge that maximizes the efforts on these issues between policy-makers and faith-communities across the United States.

Ricky Shellenbarger, CEM
Chair, Faith-Based Caucus
