The power of connection: A scholar’s journey to residency

From the age of six, Diamond Guy ’25M (MD) envisioned a career in medicine, inspired by the compassionate care she received as a child. Now a first-year dermatology resident at the University of Rochester, she attributes her journey to the powerful connections and unwavering support she found through various URM programs and mentors. (Estimated reading time: 5 minutes)

Including more females in cardiac device trials benefits all patients

A cardiac device trial published in eClinicalMedicine shows that improving enrollment of females in such trials can better guide care for all patients. Females have historically been underrepresented in research. URM scientists set out to fill that data gap by addressing multiple barriers that prevent them from enrolling in studies. (Estimated reading time: 3 minutes)

Volunteer support provides a personal touch

After Cindy Kuziak’s mother entered hospice, she was touched when volunteers helped celebrate her mother’s birthday with a lemon meringue pie. Today, as a volunteer, Cindy passes that care on to hospice patients from her own kitchen, baking everything from cakes to cookies, to recognize their special occasions.
