

Ms. Voss worked with Stephen Cook, MD, MPH on the field work to complete a community wide childhood obesity prevalence study. She was involved in the first phase of data collection and able to do some preliminary analysis. This project is still ongoing but these early analyses are confirmation that the proper approach is being applied. It is also a great example of academic and community physicians partnering on a large scale child health research project.

An abstract will be published upon completion of the study.